

Study about people writing scientific software for Germany

The purpose of this survey is to collect information about people who develop software that is used in research. We also call these people Research Software Engineers (RSEs), but they use many different job titles (including postdoctoral researcher and research assistant).

Why did I receive this invitation?

You have received this link because you are a member of the UK RSE Association or somehow known to the German chapter de-RSE or you were identified as someone creating scientific software. There is currently little reliable information about the community of people creating research related software, so we have decided to collect this information to help funders and other research organisations develop policies. This questionnaire gives you the opportunity to express your views about your current job and give us information about your career path.

Please note that this research is not compulsory and even if you decide to participate you can withdraw at any moment.

How long will it take?

There are ca. 80 questions in this survey. It takes about 15 to 20 minutes to complete.

Who is responsible for this survey?

This study is conducted by the University of Southampton on behalf of the Software Sustainability Institute (SSI) and complies with University of Southampton ethics guidelines (reference no.: ERGO/FPSE/30440). The investigators are Simon Hettrick and Olivier Philippe. The survey is hosted on Limesurvey servers in Germany and respects the provisions of the Data Protection Act. These records are anonymised and access is strictly protected and granted to the main researchers only. The results of the survey will be released publicly but only after they have been processed to ensure that individual respondents can not be identified. The results will be released under a Creative Commons by attribution, non-commercial licence.

If you would like more information about the research or about the data collection, please contact Martin Hammitzsch or Stephan Janosch.

If you have a concern or would like to make a complaint, please contact Simon Hettrick.

There are 70 questions in this survey.
